I always see the word "adequately" following the noun, but sometimes I see it preceding the noun. In the past tense, in some cases, I see the word "adequately", and in other cases I only see "adequately". Sometimes, I see "adequately" before the noun, e.g. "the adequacy of the study." Which is correct? A: The word adequately modifies (rather than strictly following) the noun in the present tense. Here are the verb and adjective forms from the OED. be adequate to (someone) adequately 2.b. To be adequate (as stated or required) for a particular purpose, etc.; to be sufficient for that purpose (OED) be adequate for (someone) adequately Modified form of adequate, used to give a general sense (OED) 14.E. To be adequate (OED) I would say that the past tense is ambiguous because the word could modify the noun, or the gerund, or an adjective, making it usable in these different contexts: be adequate (as stated or required) for a particular purpose, etc. adequately (as in order to be adequate) be adequate for (someone) Adequately (as in Adequately enough) The reason for the past tense form being ambiguous is that, because it's a modal verb, it can take both the -ly and -ly+ing suffixes (c.f. "can you", "can he", "can she", "can we", "can they" etc.). The word "adequately" is more 3da54e8ca3
